Reaping the rewards of resilience

About NAATSIHWP

The National Association of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Workers and Practitioners (NAATSIHWP) is the national peak workforce association committed to ensuring Australia's health care system meets the needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander People.

We have been funded by the Australian Government since establishment in August 2009 to:

- promote the prevention and control of disease and other health conditions in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities
- improve the health outcomes of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people
- address the impacts of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander disadvantage, and
- address the under-representation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people working within Australia's health care system.

We achieve this by:

- delivering and collaborating on initiatives to promote, professionalise and expand the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Worker and Health Practitioner workforce
- recognising, addressing and promoting the social and cultural determinants of health
- establishing and maintaining networks, partnerships and alliances with key government agencies, other Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations, researchers, academic institutions, and other national health bodies
- participating in a range of key strategic initiatives to influence the design and delivery of policies, programs and services
- role modelling the benefits of community control and self-determination, and
- implementing rights-based best practice principles and approaches.

A key part of our role involves directly supporting a national membership network of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Workers and Health Practitioners. In this respect we:

- support and promote policies to ensure the effective utilisation and professional integration of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Workers and Health Practitioner workforce
- provide support, training and resources to improve the prevention, diagnosis, treatment and management of disease and chronic health conditions
- deliver professional development forums, symposiums and conferences
- liaise with regulators, training authorities and employers to ensure the recruitment and retention of a skilled and competent workforce, and
- actively promote education and career pathways.

Our Members

'Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Workers and Health Practitioners comprise the only culturally based health workforce underpinned by national training and registration in the world'

Across mainstream Australia few would know, understand or recognise Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Workers and Health Practitioners as standalone professions. Yet, within Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Australia, this workforce is renowned as a vital and reliable community resource critical to the health and wellbeing of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. Evidence directly connects their roles to improved health across the life course.

Aboriginal and/or Torres Strait Islander Health Workers and Health Practitioners work with communities, families and individuals of all ages. They work autonomously and in teams with other health professionals, including medical doctors, registered nurses and midwives, dentists, psychologists, allied health professionals; and with policy makers, educators and researchers.

They provide a range of health services depending upon the work setting and individual scope of practice. These may include, but are not limited to:

- clinical services such as:
 - assessment and screening of physical health and social emotional wellbeing
 - health promotion for risk factors (e.g. tobacco, healthy eating)
 - providing health care in line with care plans and/or treatment protocols
 - supporting clients in self-management, including the safe use of traditional and Western medications
- planning, delivering and evaluating population health programs
- advocating for clients, including interpreting and translating language
- providing advice, support and training on providing culturally-safe health services to other health professionals, policy makers, researchers and educators
- management activities, such as:
 - staff supervision and mentoring
 - business and financial management
 - quality improvement
- education and training of Health Workers and other health professionals.

Reaping the rewards of resilience

Aboriginal and/or Torres Strait Islander Health Workers and Health Practitioners are the world's only culturally based health professional workforce that is underpinned by national training and regulation.

Our workforce was established by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in response to health system gaps and the need for culturally safe and responsive clinical and primary health care services.

The National Association of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Workers and Practitioners (NAATSIHWP) is the national peak workforce organisation with responsibility for ensuring this workforce is embedded as a vital, valued and professional component of Australia's health care system. We support a growing national network of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Workers and Health Practitioners through the provision of ongoing support, training and resources.

In 2024, NAATSIHWP is holding a National Conference over 3 and 4 September at the Perth Convention and Exhibition Centre on Whadjuk Nyoongar Country, in Western Australia.

The much-awaited National Conference will open with a welcome reception on the evening of 2 September, followed by two days of session presentations and a Gala Dinner with an Awards ceremony on the evening of 3 September. The Conference is expected to bring over 300 delegates from locations across Australia and provides a significant opportunity for stakeholders to showcase their organisations and invest in growing and supporting our workforce through sponsorships and other financial contributions. We would therefore like to invite you to join us in 'Reaping the rewards of resilience' in any way possible.

By helping make this conference a reality, you will be directly contributing to the self-determination of Aboriginal and/or Torres Strait Islander Health Workers and Health Practitioners within the Australian health system and this will result in positive education, employment and health outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people across Australia. Sponsor organisations will also have access to industry knowledge, products and services direct from the source and will be recognised as industry leaders at the forefront of growing the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander health professions.

Please note, packages outlined on this prospectus may be subject to negotiation pending public health requirements.
